

The Games Began

In 1883, a 16-year-old high school student from Massachusetts had an idea for a game. He called it BANKING. It incorporated all the ingredients vital to the success of such a pastime—strong concepts and themes, challenging goals, concise rules, and most of all, fun. And so, with his one idea, this young man began a lifetime career and prosperous business. His name—George S. Parker.

One hundred years and over 1400 games later, these same elements remain basic to every product bearing the Parker Brothers name. From the wheeling and dealing of MONOPOLY to the dashing and dodging of FROGGER—these standards of quality prevail.

Parker Brothers is proud to celebrate a century of bringing first-class fun and entertainment into the homes of millions with board games, word games, card games and puzzles. The same fun that now comes in the form of electronic games, video games and children's books. And it is this type of fun, first established by George Parker years ago, that will continue to be a trademark of Parker Brothers in the years to come.
